www.valyouation.com

The world of freelance is flourishing. People don't want to work in one place for long periods of time. 35% of U.S. workers are now freelance, and they contribute $715 billion

Every freelancer is becoming a business, and every business needs to know how to price the products and services he provides

Problem - Freelancers don't know how to price their products and services

Secondary problem - Freelancers having hard time to advertise themselves, high cost and low conversion rate

Solution

- A platform in which a freelancer can present all of his products and services, and allows people to have an open discussion on the price
- An algorithm that takes all the data and make the final advised price
- Advertising through pricing - the platform will also act as another media for freelances to show themselves to the world

Competitors

- Price comparison platforms - Shopsavvy, Zap and Quickscan - they only deal with comparing prices from different market places
- Freelance job finding platforms - Upwork, Guru and Fiverr - they only deal with connecting between the customer and the freelance
- Competera - self pricing platform for retailers and vendors
- Alljobs - starting to focus on price

FAQs

What is the difference between valyouation and other freelance platform?

Freelance platforms focus on connecting freelancers with employers. Price is not the main focus. Fiverr for example tried to give a constant rate of 5$ in the beginning for all sort of services, but now they become a regular freelance platform

Price is a key element in our world. The price determines if a person will need to work 20 or 40 years for a house. The official advise to companies is uasually don't talk with the customer on the price, and 99% of us don't have any influence about the price of anything. Therefore it is important to provide people with the ability to influence, and not only by not buying it

The point valyouation is meant to prove is that people want to talk about price. I have chosen freelancers only because I am one of them

Where is the revenue?

Data is becoming the most valuable resource. We all create it and as always 99% of us see nothing from it. The model is to give actual value to the users for their data. For this purpose, a cryptographic currency will be created, and integrated into the platform

This coin will be used to give an incentive to the people which create the data on the platform and will show the value of the platform. And as known if the value of it will rise, it will give money to continue R&D. The main money will come from the data on the patterns and thinking of people when pricing things
